Base Class Pointer

Why Base class Pointer to Derived class Object?

• It is used for achieving polymorphism.

• You will get clear idea, Once you complete this section

• This entire section is a single topic, useful in next section

Base class Pointer can access which methods?

• If a Base Class pointer is pointing on derived class object then using the base class pointer we can access only inherited methods (methods defined in base class) on derived class object.